RE: Bibliography for Professional Development

This Bibliography is meant for professional use, that is, to let you know about the most recently published books about North American Indians.

The Appendix of this Bibliography contains a list of publishers and their addresses. Most of these publishers are from the United States. It is not possible to write directly to the publisher to obtain copies of these publications so we are attaching a list of Canadian wholesalers from whom you may obtain these publications. We have placed an asterik beside the wholesalers that we recommend.

INTRODUCTION

This Bibliography is designed to aid professional development in the field of Education. The Bibliography attempts to categorize and separate fields of interest.

The books selected are those which were printed during the last three years.

Not all the books are contained within the Indian and Northern Curriculum Resources Library. The publishers are provided so that the interested party may personally obtain the materials desired.

The second portion, Appendix A, is a list of publishers and their addresses. The reader may wish to contact them for more information within their field of interest.

The organization of this Bibliography is such that it should make available the most recent books to your existing library.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This Bibliography was amassed as a guide to enable a person to find, categorically, information concerning Indians and Eskimos of America.

The compilation of the Bibliography was done by Mrs. Helen Fehr The stenographic work was done by Mrs. Beryl McCullough.

"The author maintains that the present conflict between generations is unique, without a past parallel, and worldwide. She "establishes models of three kinds of societies and their methods of transition from one generation to the other. The oldest she calls 'postfigurative' in which grandchildren, parents, and children exist together. Wisdom resides in the old....The 'cofigurative.' like the United States before 1940....was a society in which adults and children alike learned from their peers, a society of mobility and improvisation. This society we are still trying to perpetuate after its day is past. What we now require and what Mead . . . believes is coming is the 'prefigurative' society, worldwide in which the role of parents . . . is only to nurture the child, to be custodians of the world and, the child until he is old enough to teach us." "Stenhouse, in perceptive wide-ranging discussions, clarifies and illuminates many of the problems which are raised by the consideration of the very nature of culture, its transmission, and the role which formally structured education plays in the achievement of particular ends... This is an abstruse investigation by a highly cultivated mind into the socio-anthropological attributes of culture and the role of education as the agency of transmission. Recommended only for specialized collections in cultural anthropology." (Choice)

Benne, Kenneth D. Education for Tradegy: Essays in Disenchanted Hope for Modern Man. 1967. pap. 2.50 (pap. ISBN 0 - 8131 - 0124 - 7). U. Pr. of Ky.

The "Berenson Professor of Human Relations at Boston University believes that a sense of tragedy should be an important educational concern. He traces the influence of tragedy in art, literature, drama, and poetry, and shows its relationship to man down through the centuries. He (argues) . . . the need for a sense of tragedy in modern man, and (suggests) its importance in philosophies like existenialism. . . . He outlines ways to bring people to grips with tradegy, such as through the use of the T (or training) Group." (Library J) These essays have appeared previously in such publications as Daedalus, Journal of Social Issues and Adult Education.

This volume of eleven essays by educators "considers the ends of education -- the fundamental purposes for which schools exist. A nation transmits its ideology to new generations through its schools. In the opinion of the eucators represented here, the interdependence of nations today demands that this ideology be broad enough to include those universal values as truth common to mankind as a whole. Part One, in essays by Robert Ulich, J. R. Seely, and G. N. Shuster, considers whether such values as truth and justice are good for all men everywhere and asks whether wisdom, like knowledge, can be taught. Part Two, in essays by Barbara Biber, J. I. Goodiad, E. S. Johnson, and H. M. Kallen, analyzes the teaching of human values in pre-school, elementary, secondary, and higher education. In Part Three, P. F. Brandwein, Anne Roe, Van Meter Ames and Ulich explore the relevance of the idea of mankind in particular fields of study -- the sciences, behavioral sciences, aesthetics, and the humanities."

A Boston Schoolteacher, author of How Children Fail (BRD 1965) "describes the ways in which bright or normal children tackle learning by themselves, experimentally and as a game. He feels teachers should be patient, let children talk more in school, give them time to figure things out, not press or correct them... This natural approach to learning can begin at 16 months, and, in due course, extend to sports, art, math almost any subject."

"As a teacher of the Maori children in New Zealand, the author found it necessary to experiment with new and different teaching methods to prepare her pupils for the difficult transition at a relatively early age from a simple, rather primitive culture to that of the complex modern world. The first half of the book is an explanation, a justification, of her Creative Teaching Scheme, an organic process based on the intensity of the child's interest, and of her Maori reader series which utilizes the Key Vacabulary of the native youngsters rather than an artificial vocabulary of faraway England or the United States. Her methods are illustrated by brief case studies. The second half consists of stories of the Maori children, their families, their daily activities, their recreation, but most of all, their school life."

"This essay concerns the debate over the origins of the American Indians in the two centuries before it became distinguished from the question of the origins of their cultures, and before it began to take on the characteristics of a scientific dispute....Two clearly distinguished traditions have emerged from my investigations: the Acostan and the Garcian." In this book the author sets forth her theory concerning "the origin of Mexican and Central and South American civilizations: These Indian cultures, the author suggests, did not spring up independently but as a result of pre-Columbian transatlantic contact between the Old World and the New. The legend of Quetzalcoatl was cherished by the Aztecs, Mayas and Incas....Where the legend once flourished, archaeologists have unearthed colossal stone negroid heads; reliefs depicting priests with semitic features; indications of snake, sun, and cat cults....All these disparate elements were combined in one ancient civilization -- the Phoenician." Deloria, Vine. Custer Died for Your Sins. 1969. Macmillan Pub. Co. Toronto

"If this book is indicative of Deloria's methods, he's more interested in results than in being tactful. Nauseated by the traditional Indian image, he asserts the worth if not the dignity of the redman and blasts the political, social, and religious forces that perpetuate the Little Big Horn and wigwam stereotyping of his people ... Although Deloria's subject is serious, he approaches it non-formally. In fact, he dovotes a chapter to Indian humor in addition to generously sprinkling anecdotes and one-liners into his commentary." The author's "two principal themes are native North American cultures and social evolution, with a leitmotif of introductory anthropological theory interwoven throughout the book's chapters. Most of its pages are taken up with ... descriptions of ten American Indian societies presented in order of social complexity from Shoshonean hunters and collectors of the Great Basin to the highly evolved Aztec state. After thus outlining the ... range of variation of Indian societies and placing them within evolutionary categories, the author considers their histories, as evidenced by archeology, physical anthropology, and linguistics. A final section covers the cultural and physical destruction of the American Indian by European settlers." (Sat. R) Bibliography. Index.

ABSTRACT Participants in the library Services Institute for Minnesota Indians compiled an annotated bibliography of materials about American Indians which had been evaluated from an Indian frame of reference. Materials were evaluated in terms of artistic quality, reader appeal, and potential contribution to the study of American Indians.

Included in the biblography are over 500 entries representing library books classified by educational level, pamphlets, maps, slides, and records. Most of the materials were published since 1960, although some date back as far as the 1930's. Names and addresses of Indian craftsmen in Minnesota, contemporary Indian artists, museums with permanent exhibits of Indian artifacts, and speakers knowledgeable in phases of Indian affairs and history are also included. Mrs. Ethel Brant Monture, a descendant of Joseph Brant has observed that Indians have been portrayed as murderers, "instead of looking at us as a people struggling to hold an identity in our land against the incoming hordes". Today's Indian is calling attention to the image which has been portrayed of him and is re-asserting the dignity and validity of his past.

Dr. E. Palmer Patterson of the History Department of the University of Waterloo has written the first complete and comprehensive history of the Canadian Indian. He has lived with these people, studied their traditional past and worries about their future. His book is written for everyone who shares his concdrn about the Canadian Indian.

In this anthology the reader "will find selections from the oral literature of the Indians in the northern Rocky Mountain region of the United States ... The tribes that have lived [there] since white men came to the region, according to John R. Swanton of the Bureau of American Ethnology, are the Nez Perces, Coeur d'Alenes, Flatheads, Kalispels (or Pend d'Oreilles), Kutenais, Shoshonis, Bannocks, Arapahos, Gros Ventres, Blackfeet, Assiniboines and Crows. Because the Sioux frequently came into Montana and Wyoming to make war or to hunt buffalo, two of their landscape legends are included." (Introd) Bibliography. Index.

"Vogel's discussion, not history, of American Indian Medicine is an amended and expanded version of his doctoral dissertation. It bears the common flaws of many such works. The first six chapters substitute rambling description for careful analysis ... Throughout, but especially in the first six chapters, there is excessive quotation; in many places it amounts to space filling ... As concrete description Vogel's book is adequate; as formal or abstract analysis it is weak ... [but it] provides a useful reference and is equipped with ... extensive footnotes."

Grant, Campbell. Rock Art of the American Indian. (IL) 1967. 12.95 (ISBN 0 - 690 - 70749 - 5) T. Y. Crowell

In this survey of North American aboriginal rock carvings and paintings, the author "reviews other writings and ties the subject together, discussing the purposes, techniques, dating, preservation and location of the approximately 15,000 sites where rock art may be found. Color and black-and-white photographs and drawings point up the similarities, differences, tribal wanderings, and ritual meanings," (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Shamanism

Lommel, Andreas. Shamanism: The Art of the Early Hunter. 1968. 12.00 (ISBN 0 - 07 - 038650 - 1) McGraw

This "study of the nature of shamanism ... (by the) director of the National Museum of Ethnology, Munich, links magico-religious phenomena as found among hunting and gathering societies with the genesis of art in its various forms." (Library J) Bibliography. Originally published in German under the title Die Welt der fruhen jager, Medizinmanner, Schamanen, Kunstler.

Social Adjustment

Goffman, Erving. Stigma: Notes on the Management of Spoiled Identity. (orig.) 1963. pap. 1.95 (pap. S73) spec. P-H

This book "explores the basic organization of face-to-face interaction. It describes and analyzes the ordering and patterning of conduct that people tacitly cooperate to sustain whenever they ar in one another's presence. It argues that, although this order is made up of small rulings regarding 'proper' conduct, failure to abide by these norms of social intercourse is at the core of what we call mental disorder." (Publisher's note) Bibliographical footnotes.

Social Change

Eggan, Fred & Swift, Harold H. American Indian: Perspectives for the Study of Social Change. 1966. 6.00 Aldine

"This excellent volume by a fine anthropologist and American Indian specialist contributes to theories of social and cultural change in social anthropology and provides historical perspectives on Morgan, American anthropology, and American Indian problems ... There is no completely comparable book ... Although of greater interest to the anthropologist and American Indian specialist, the book is also for history or social science graduates and advanced undergraduates who have some anthropological background."

Mead, Margaret. Continuities in Cultural Evolution. (IL) 1964. 12.50x; pap. 2.95 (ISBN 0 - 300 - 00762 - 0; pap. ISBN 0 - 300 - 00166 - 5, Y 154) Yale U Pr.

"Natural selection requires variety to provide alternatives. Those alternatives which are favored by circumstance will give directions of further development. Among humans, opportunities are provided by novelties created by geniuses with vision, and made effective (where they exist) by 'clusters' of such creators and their followers. To increase the number and effectiveness of such clusters is to provide the social inventions required to move our evolution in favorable directions. At each step there will be increased knowledge on the basis of which a new vision will be possible and a cluster of men will initiate a new favorable direction." (N. Y. Times Bk R) Bibliography.
